VOL. 5, NO. 25 — MONESSEN, PA., TUESDAY, JULY 24, 1906. — SIX CENTS THE WEEK

FIVE GOOD FAST GAMES.

Are Promised the Local Base Ball Fans Begining with Thursday Closing with the Leaders.

Beginning Thursday July 26 with the Charleroi team the Locals will play five of the most interesting games yet pulled off this season on the home grounds Saturday July 28, will see the Roscoe-Cal aggregation, which is so close on the heels of the leaders, in action at Atheletic park and another lively contest can be looked for. On July 31 the Monongahela bunch will be up and another ripping good game is promised as both teams are supremely confident of their respective ability to lift the scalp of the other. Aug. 2 Vaughn's men will try to take a fall out of the Tailenders.

There is a strong possibility that the crowd of tossers will not be drowned without a struggle and the local fans will no doubt have a chance to see the game as she should be played.

As a fitting close to the series, on Saturday Aug. 4, McKean will be on hands with his rejuvinated Champs and a red hot bang-up exhibition of the National is sure to result.

The chances are that at these five games the capacity of Atheletic Park will be taxed.

LOSES LIFE TO SAVE TRAIN.

Foreman Tries to Remove Jack From Track as Train Approaches and He is Killed.

At the cost of his own life Frank Reffney 37 years old, a Pennsylvania railroad track foreman, saved a passenger train from wreck as it was rounding the Horseshoe curve on the main line yesterday morning. His men had cleared the track, when the approach of the swift accommodation caused them to get out of the way.

Reffney discovered that a jack which projected above the rail had been forgotten. Realizing the danger of the train being derailed, he sprang to the jack and wrenched it from the rail. He was just in time to avert a wreck, but too late to save himself. He was struck and his skull was crushed. He resided near where the accident occured.

Will Ask For Third Trial.

Thursday at Uniontown arguments will be heard on the motion for a new trial for Wilbur Minney, the Belle Vernon negro twice convicted in the first degree for the killing of his mistress nearly a year ago. His attorneys have filed several reasons why the case should be given a third hearing. Minney has few sympathizers and it is the general opinion that the motion will be overruled and sentence pronounced. The hearing will be before Judge E. H. Reppert.

THE fact that Wall street showed up strong yesterday with heavier sales and better prices, despite the upset in Russia and the death of Russel Sage, is commented on in New York dispatches as an indication of the strength of the American financial institution. A QUARTET

(Original)

In the spring of 189— a young couple, Mr. and Mrs. Chapin, appeared in a western city, and, having found lodgings, the husband sought employment. He developed striking business talents, and it was not long before he was engaged in a small manufacturing enterprise of his own. The article he made was patented, and the business became very valuable. Mr. Chapin bought a house in the best part of the city, and the couple entertained considerably.

But it was not long before it began to be whispered that all was not well with the Chapins. A young man, Arthur Gilman, was devoting himself to young Mrs. Chapin. It appeared to be one of those cases wherein a husband having perfect confidence in his wife fails to see what every one else sees—either this or seeing he pretends not to see. Chapin, at least so far as the world knew, gave himself no concern as to his wife's attendant, seeming to be himself absorbed in a friendship with one of his own sex. He and Fletcher Ford were inseparable. They constantly drove out together, attended amusements together and at social entertainments would sit chatting together instead of devoting themselves to the women.

"What a fool," said Madam Grundy, "to be so devoted to a man friend as to let his wife drift into trouble."

The world did not see all that was going on in the quartet. If Chapin did not hear of the scandal of which he was the one most interested, Fletcher Ford did. He took it upon himself to admonish his friend that, though personally he considered Mrs Chapin perfectly innocent, society was becoming shocked.

The admonition was taken in good part. Chapin admitted that he had noticed Gilman's attentions, but his confidence in his wife's purity was absolute. The only change that came from Ford's interference was that Gilman and Mrs. Chapin were seen less together in public. But Gilman was still so much at the Chapins' home that Ford, who was a witness of the fact, told his friend he was beginning to lose respect for him. This seemed to trouble Chapin, but he did not seem to have the courage to break up his wife's liaison. Finally Ford became so irritated at the sneering remarks he heard that he went to Chapin's house one evening and told him that their friendship was at an end.

Chapin at this thrust broke down, and Ford was astonished to see a tear in his eye. It was the first evidence he had seen that after all there must be something in the affair that had not been explained. But above all Gilman was made aware of Chapin's value of his good opinion. Ford affectionately laid his hand on his friend's arm and besought him to give him his confidence. The young husband, though much moved, would not reveal what was troubling him. Ford pressed him to confide in him, but Chapin suddenly sprang up and left the room, saying that he would confer with his wife and see what could be done to mend the matter. Ford was much affected at seeing his friend's emotion and seized his hand as he left the room with a view to comfort him. But Chapin broke away from him and went upstairs.

Ford was puzzled. He could see no evidence of trouble on his friend's mind pertaining to his wife, Chapin's sole grief seeming to be at losing his friend's respect and the parting that was imminent between them. He remained waiting in the library where Chapin had left him for some time, then was about to depart, when he heard a rustling of skirts on the staircase and Mrs. Chapin entered, accompanied by a lady whom Ford did not at first recognize. Yet there was something about her that struck him with astonishment. She was so like his friend Chapin that she must be his twin sister. Her face alternated between blushes and pallor, and she seemed ill at ease in her feminine apparel.

"Henry Chapin!" exclaimed Ford. "What do you mean by getting yourself up in woman's dress?"

"I am not Henry Chapin; I am Margaret Eaton. This is Blanche Eaton, my sister. When we were thrown on our own resources after a life of luxury I shrank from supporting myself and my sister—for she was too delicate to shift for herself—clogged by woman's skirts, woman's disadvantages. I put on man's clothes, and we came here where he were not known. We were prospering when my sister fell in love with Arthur Gilman, and, unfortunately, he fell in love with her Nor is that all. Failing to induce us to reveal our secret, he married her clandestinely and has been living with her for some time as her husband.

"Arthur!" she called, and Gilman, an amused look on his face, came in from one of the other rooms

When Ford left the house after a long consultation with the others it was agreed that Margaret Chapin should never again appear in man's attire. The two women, veiled, left the city that night and their affairs were wound up by the men, who eventually followed them Fletcher Ford married Margaret Eaton, and the four settled in a distant land

The disappearance of the actors in the little drama occasioned no startling surprise. So carefully was it managed that to this day in speaking of the Chapins people wonder what became of them. It was remembered that they went away on a visit and never returned. Ford and Gilman left the place at different times. Some said the Chapins left to get rid of the two men.

Vegetable Gluttons.

Sundews, common in English marshes, are sufficiently knowing to distinguish between various substances presented to them Offer them a nice scrap of tender beef, and in a couple of hours they will have concealed it from sight. Try them with a piece of chalk or a tiny pebble, and they remain stolidly immovable Wet the chalk and offer it again, and the plant apparently mistakes it for meat, the bristles gradually closing round it; then, discovering the deception, they gradually relax and return the chalk without thanks. These vegetable gluttons will absorb morsels of poached eggs and mutton chops, but cheese turns the leaves quite black and finally kills them.

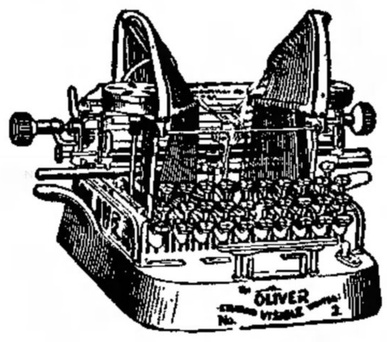
The Oliver Typewriter is just like an athlete stripped for a race



It is free from unnecessary multiplicity of wires and springs

No net work of flimsy keys to get tied into hard knots

The nimble fingered stenographer can put talk into type with this machine just as rapidly as she takes your dictation.

For no matter how swiftly she writes, she can see just what she's doing.

The keyboard is so wonderfully responsive to the touch of the finger tips that speed comes without effort.

The factors that make for speed are its visible writing, its light, elastic key-touch, and it's all 'round simplicity It has the fewest possible wearing points, and it prints with a downward stroke.

FOOLING BENSON

By Charles Freeman

Copyright, 1905, by Ruby Douglas

"No one has been in your compartment since the money came in, has there?" demanded Robert Cable.

"No one," admitted Jack Niblo, "but, on the other hand, I have handled no money from that drawer."

"Therefore it must have been a mistake in your addition. I am sorry, Jack, but we shall have to look to you to repay the loss."

"But this is the third time this week that this has happened," pleaded Niblo.

"All the more reason why you should be more careful," said the president shortly. "It is inexcusable that a receiving teller should make three mistakes in a single week. If there is a repetition of this trouble I am afraid that I shall have to replace you."

Niblo bowed and left the private office. It seemed pretty hard to him that he should be required to make good a $200 shortage in a single week, but three times when he had come to balance his accounts he had found that he was short. Once it had been a hundred dollar bill that was missing, and twice his sheet showed a fifty dollar shortage

He had the money with which to make up the loss, for he had been saving up ever since Nettie Cable promised to marry him. At this rate the savings would soon vanish, yet if he was forced to give up his position because he was unreliable his savings would be gone before he could obtain another position without a recommendation from the bank.

It was with a heavy heart that he went to meet her They were to go to a concert that evening. The girl's quick eyes perceived his despondency, and as they walked along she drew the story from him.

"Who do you think it is?" she asked.

"That's the worst of it," he declared. "I have no grounds for suspecting any one. When I come back from lunch to relieve Benson the money is right to a penny. The loss or mistake or whatever it is comes after that."

"FORTY FIFTIES," HE LAUGHED. "DO YOU MAKE IT THE SAME?"

"But you can't be making mistakes all the time," she insisted "Isn't it possible that some one comes into your cage for a moment?"

"Not a soul was in there all the afternoon," he said positively.

"And Mr. Fells cannot reach over from his cage?"

"The money is all in the drawer. He would have to open that first."

"Have you looked behind the drawer?" she asked hopefully. "Perhaps it just fell down behind."

"I had the drawer out," he explained, "and looked behind it."

"Who is that in there?" she asked suddenly as they passed the bank building.

"It must be Benson," he answered carelessly. "He works late on the foreign business. I don't know whether he does it because he likes work or because he wants to make a good impression on your father, but he is at it all the time."

"Is the money all locked up?"

"Benson wouldn't take it anyhow," he declared, "but the money is locked with a time lock. Benson merely uses the small safe with the books."

"I don't like Mr. Benson," she said decidedly. "Father refuses to interfere, but I know that Mr. Benson has tried to get him to send you away and take him as a son-in-law."

"You don't suppose he would steal my money, do you?" laughed Jack.

"I'd think anything," she said positively. "You may laugh if you want to, but somehow I feel that he wants to get you out of the way."

"Forewarned is forearmed," he said, laughing. "We'll fool him yet, or, rather, you will. I don't think I'm clever enough."

"I think I'm as clever as Mr. Benson," she announced, "and I'm going to fool him, see if I don't."

They turned into the concert hall, next the bank, and in the music Jack forgot the threat.

He did not even recall it a few days later when Nettie came into the bank and, after a chat with her father, made her way to Niblo's compartment. He sprung the latch on the lattice door for her and returned to counting the pile of bills in front of him.

She leaned on the counter beside him, and as he turned over the bills he glanced at her.

"Forty fifties," he laughed. "Do you make it the same?" Nettie nodded, and he turned to the rest of the money. Silently she checked the other items on the deposit slip, and as the boy turned away from the window she picked up one of the bills.

"What is that?" she demanded, pointing to some glistening particles.

Niblo laughed.

"That's from the foundry," he explained. "Gregson has been buying some steel."

"How do you know?" she asked.

"Gregson is peculiar. He pays cash for everything he gets. The foundry sends him stuff for the houses he is building in the new section, and as the last load is dumped he sends over to pay for it. He will not use a bank, but pays in cash, and he never lets a bill run overnight."

"Does he buy much?" she asked as she fingered a bill.

"They deposit cash about three times a week."

"And always with this thing on?"

"It's steel filings," explained Niblo. "They are everywhere over at the foundry." He slipped the bills in the drawer and stuck the slip on the spindle.

"Jack," she said suddenly, "count the money again."

"I just did," he said, in surprise, as he opened the drawer. The other bills had been banded, and it was an easy matter to get only the foundry deposit. He ran the bills over rapidly, then turned to her with a puzzled expression.

"What do you make it?" he asked.

"Thirty-nine," she declared as she picked up the pile of bills and laid them back in the drawer. "Don't find the other even if you can. Just wait. As soon as you are out of the bank come over to George Castle's."

All through the rest of the afternoon he wondered as he went about his work. There was trouble over the shortage, and Niblo left the bank with a warning that the next mistake would be his last.

He went straight across the street to the dental office in the postoffice building, where Nettie had told him to meet her, and in the darkness they watched the interior of the bank.

At last Benson came into the receiving teller's pen and fumbled there a moment. With a little cry Nettie ceased her vigil and went to the telephone. Half an hour later Nettie, her father and Niblo confronted Benson, still poring over his books.

In his pocket was a bill to which the steel filings still clung, and Nettie led the way to Niblo's compartment. Pulling out the drawer, she fumbled beneath for a second and drew out a heavy magnet.

"I noticed that the filings were pasted on the bills," she explained. "The treasurer at the foundry is Mr. Benson's cousin. They arranged that deposits should be made in the afternoon, when the drawer was already full and the bills would reach high. One bill would stick to the magnet on account of the filings. The drawer is not locked after the money is taken out, and it was easy when the watchman was in another part of the bank to slip in and take it off. If I had not tried to pick a speck off the bill Jack showed me no one would ever have guessed it. He gained his end and the money as well."

A little later Jack left Nettie at the gate. "With the salary that goes with the cashier's job I guess I can afford to get married now," he said.

"For what else did I fool Benson?" asked Nettie as she raised her lips for a kiss. "I told you I'd do it, and I did."

Facts About Mankind.

Married people live longer than the unmarried, the temperate and industrious longer than the gluttons and idle, and civilized nations longer than the uncivilized. Tall persons enjoy a greater longevity than small ones.

Women have a more favorable chance of life before reaching their fiftieth year than men, but a less favorable one after that period. The proportion of married persons to single ones is as 75 to 1,000. Persons born in spring have a more robust constitution than those born at other seasons. Births and deaths occur all the world over more frequently at night than in the day time.

There are at present 3,000 languages spoken by the inhabitants of our globe, whose religious convictions are divided between 1,000 different confessions of faith.

The average duration of life is thirty-three years. One-fourth of the population of the earth dies before attaining the seventeenth year. Of a thousand persons only one reaches the age of a hundred years and not more than six that of sixty-five years

The Most Useful Fish.

The cod is the most useful fish in the world. As an article of food, wholesome and substantial, either fresh or salted and dried, it forms a valuable addition to the food resources of the world, and in this and other ways few members of the animal kingdom are more universally serviceable to mankind. Enormously prolific (one fish producing 9,000,000 eggs) and widely distributed, its usefulness is appreciated almost everywhere. The tongue is considered a delicacy, the swimming bladder furnishes isinglass equal to that got from the sturgeon, while cod liver oil has a worldwide reputation as a medicine and food in pulmonary and other wasting diseases, where its highly nutritive properties give it great value. The Norwegians give cods' heads, mixed with marine plants, to their cows to increase the yield of milk. The Icelanders give the bones to their cattle and in Kamchatka the dogs are fed on them, while in the icy wastes, destitute of trees, they are frequently dried and used as fuel.—London Answers.

HAPPY WOMEN.

Wouldn't any woman be happy,
After years of backache suffering,
Days of misery, nights of unrest,
The distress of urinary troubles,
To find relief and cure?
No reason why any reader
Should suffer in the face of evidence like this:

Mrs. Almira A. Jackson, of East Front St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "For twenty years I was doctoring for kidney and liver trouble, but without benefit. Just before I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I was almost paralyzed. I could hardly stand on my feet because of the numbness and lack of circulation. Had a knife been thrust into my kidneys the pain could not have been more intense. My sleep was disturbed by visions of distorted figures. The kidney secretions were annoyingly irregular, and I was tortured with thirst and always bloated. I used seven boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The bloating subsided until I weighed 100 pounds less, could sleep like a child and was relieved of the pain and the irregularity of the kidney action. My circulation is good and I feel better in every way."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mrs. Jackson will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists; price, 50 cents per box.

G. B. Burhams Testifies after four Years.

G. B. Burham of Carlisle Center, N. Y., writes "About four years ago I wrote you stating that I had been entirely cured of a severe kidney trouble by taking less than two bottles of Foley's Kidney Cure. It entirely stopped the brick dust sediment, and pain and symptoms of kidney disease disappeared I'm glad to say that I have never had a return of any of those symptoms during the four years that have elapsed and I am evidently cured to stay cured, and heartily recommend Foley's Kidney Cure to any one suffering from kidney or bladder trouble." AN EXCITING EXPERIENCE

Is Passed Through by Two Monessen Ladies While Out Driving This Morning.

Two well known ladies of this place who were out driving this morning very narrowly missed being mixed up in a runaway which might have resulted seriously. They were driving down Sixth street hill, where so many runaways occur on account of the steep grade, when the strap which held the holding back straps in place broke letting it drop almost to the horses' knees. A bystander quickly caught the frightened animal before it had time to bolt, and after the ladies had gotten out of the rig led it down to the foot of the hill where with the aid of an Independent man the broken harness was repaired sufficiently to permit of the team being driven home. The ladies were somewhat frightened by the experience and are extremely thankful that it ended as it did.

Base Ball Scraps.

Nothing doing yesterday.

Today the Locals tackle the Champs.

Maybe the Combines didn't make the Leaders go some Saturday.

A game everyday for the rest of this week. Get em all fellows.

Charleroi and Monongahela will cross bats at the latter place this afternoon.

John McIlvain, Lindsay's crack pitcher, is now wearing an East Liverpool uniform.

Today's games should prove all the more interesting on account of yesterday's rest.

Henning will do the twirling against the ex West Newton bunch this afternoon.

Haggerman hung it on Uniontown yesterday. No scores and three hits. That sounds just like Casey.

The locals had a picture of themselves returning to Monessen with Fayette Citys scalp Saturday but it was not to be.

Wonder why a league official didn't umpire Saturday's game at Fayette City. Surely there are enough of them to go 'round.

The Cincinnati Nationals will play Scottdale Wednesday at Ellsworth park. Quite a number of local fans will attend the game.

No one seems to want that pair of shoes Jones, the shoe man, offered to the first local league player who, on the home grounds, banged the ball for four sacks. Leastwise the ball has not yet been banged the required distance.

Pollard has it on all of them. And we have another pitcher or two that can hold them down. Come out and see us operate against Charleroi Tuesday evening. — Monongahela Republican. Mr Pollard certainly has it on Charleroi. "Skidoo."

If you were unlucky in picking the winning horse, or placing your coin on the right number at the local track, don't pout, but follow the bunch to Dawson and get even.—Greensburg Star. Even a worse cleaning out than you have just experienced.

The John L. Spark's Shows.

Such a long list of talented performers are seldom seen with one show, yet all of these and many others will appear with the Spark's Shows at Monessen Tuesday July 31st. The great Millette Troupe of acrobats. The wonderful Valentinos, aerial casting acts. The beautiful Kadelle Sisters, queens of the air. The Aerial St. Elmos, whose truly startling performances will create a sensation. The Valenos, Roman rings, Hines, the upside down acrobat. Mons. Tade, the pyramid expert. Large, the mysterious clown and the box. Ashton, king of the wire. Prof. Dan Costello and his wonderful ponies. Mary, wisest elephant in captivity. Koko, the giant ape. Trained lions, tigers, dogs and monkeys.

The troupe of funny clowns headed by Barney Shea and Billy Lightfoot will keep the audience laughing, while Panhandle Pete and his comedy mules will make everybody howl.

There will be a gorgeous street parade at noon, and big free exhibitions at the show grounds immediately after the parade.

FATE OF THE JUNE BUGS.

Awful Punishment That Was Decreed by an Ancient Council.

"Berne has an official collector of June bugs," writes a correspondent of the Chicago News from Switzerland. "This personage is appointed by the city council when the triennial pest of June bugs occurs, and he is empowered to destroy all the insects that may be brought to him. Each owner of a small estate is obliged to gather five pounds of bugs, and those who happen to be the proprietors of larger pieces of property must collect proportionately more. For each pound that is missing from this obligatory amount a fine of 10 cents is imposed, but if more than the required quota is forthcoming a premium of 2 cents a pound is paid. This remuneration is offered also to others besides the property owners. A landholder who entirely neglects to gather any bugs at all is subject to a fine of from $5 to $10. School children receive permission to enter large estates, where they shake the trees and poke long sticks about in their endeavors to dislodge as many bugs as possible.

"In times of old, the ancient chroniclers tell us, it was the custom to attempt to rid the country of these unwelcome visitors by citing them into court and by banishing them from the country, but the wily insects failed to obey the summons and continued to fly about in the face of the law, laying eggs promiscuously and contrary to edict. In a certain village it was determined to make a terrible and lasting example of all the insects found within its borders. With considerable expenditure of time and patience quantities of bugs were collected and placed in a huge sack. Deliberation was held as to the fate of these hard backed prisoners. Ordinary death was considered too light a punishment for such offenders. A hideous end must be theirs.

"A procession of the inhabitants of the village, advisers and councilors, wise men and children, wended its way slowly toward the place of execution, the summit of a high peak. This was laboriously climbed, an executioner with the bag of buzzing bugs in the lead. With due regard for the responsibility and justness of their act, the wise men approached the edge of the precipice. The bugs were to be ignominiously dashed to pieces on the rocks thousands of feet below. The executioner hung over the crag, the bag, top downward, was opened and the bugs shaken out to their death. But instead of falling like so many lumps of lead, as they ought to have done on such an occasion, the bugs, to the amazement of all, spread their wings and flew away."

No More Ten-Trip Tickets.

Information was sent out yesterday that this will be the last day of the sale of the ten-trip tickets which have been on sale at $1 75 each by the Baltimore & Ohio railroad company for years, and which a number of merchants were buying in bulk and selling at a profit. These tickets are sold between McKeesport and Pittsburg.

It is announced that after today the company will sell the ten-trip tickets, but they will be stamped and bear the name of the buyer, so they will not be transferrable, and will have to be punched by the conductor. Thus the commission of the dealer will be cut off. A number of people bought big lots of the tickets yesterday as to be ahead of the new arrangement.

Guides to Health

Olive Oil is better for interior than exterior application. Swallow a tablespoonful of olive oil three times a day if troubled with innutrition. If you wish an emolient use cold cream or refined mutton tallow.

The gentlewoman uses powder. The vulgarian abuses it. On an oily skin the use of powder instead of soap and water is what discredits it with the fastidious.

Lemon juice or a stronger application made of colorless iodine will remove brown spots from the skin.

Never go to bed hungry. Morpheus prefers to be treated more hospitably and objects to that "gone feeling." A cracker, a cup of hot milk or broth will be found a splendid antidote for sleeplessness.

An application of lemon juice followed by a salt rub will whiten the hands.

Don't fill your bedroom with gew gaws and knick-knacks to collect dust. Restful sleep comes oftener to the bedroom that is as plain and antiseptically clean as the hospital ward.

If wakeful try the following: Inhale through the mouth extending the abdomen upward as far as possible. At the point of greatest inhalation stretch the arms upward and the limbs downward as vigorously as possible. Six or eight repititions of this exercise will cure a very bad case of insomnia.

Ralston, Belle Vernon's new second baseman, is putting up a great game, both with the stick and at the middle station.

THE SYMPATHY OF MISS AUDENREID

[Original.]

Miss Audenreid one day on going to her window noticed that the sign "Apartments to Let" which had for some time decorated the house opposite had been taken down. A few days after this she saw a young man whose overcoat reached to his ankles walk somewhat stiffly to a carriage standing at the door, get in and go for a drive. He was a very nice looking fellow, faultlessly dressed, and just before being driven away he cast a glance at the window where the lady was standing looking at him. She at once lowered her glance and left the window.

A few days later she saw the same young man driven away again. He looked up at her window; but, as she was standing at a distance, she kept her position and noticed that the occupant of the carriage kept his eyes fixed on her window till he had passed beyond her house. Several times a week he took a drive and always looked for her. Miss Audenreid's curiosity was excited to know why the young man always wore the long overcoat, be the weather cold or warm, and why she never saw him leave the house on foot. She also noticed that as soon as he was comfortably seated he bent down and adjusted something, but what the process was she could not see.

One day she went to the window just as he was driving away, not knowing that he was out, and received a look in which there was unconscious admiration. As the carriage turned an automobile came tearing down the street, there was a collision, and when it was over a painful sight greeted Miss Audenreid. The man who lived opposite was being carried back into the house. But the most horrible sight of all was a man disappearing within the house carrying a leg.

To see a man's leg cut off in this horrible manner completely unsettled the lady's nerves, and she had not the courage to even look at the house opposite for several days. Meanwhile her heart went out to the mutilated man. She was anxious to know whether he would live and would have asked her brother to inquire if she had had a brother, which she had not. She restrained her sympathy for awhile, then wrote a note stating that a lady who had witnessed the accident wished to be informed how the injured man was doing. This she sent by a maid to the proprietor of the house opposite. He sent it up to the sufferer and in a few minutes a reply came down, written on note paper decorated with a crest, saying that the gentleman was profoundly moved by the lady's sympathy and he was happy to say that his physician assured him that he would recover. Miss Audenreid sent her maid over again with inquiries, and with the reply she brought a number of roses with a request that the sympathetic lady would permit the sufferer to thus express his appreciation of her kindly interest.

Miss Audenreid looked at the beautiful flowers, remembered the unconscious glance of admiration the invalid had given her but a moment before having been mutilated for life, and a tear stood in her eye. She considered that she was warranted in encouraging a sufferer to get again on his feet—or, rather, his one foot—and permitted herself by sending a note of thanks to be drawn into a correspondence, for the sufferer replied to her note of thanks begging her to help him bear his confinement and his sufferings by writing him occasionally, promising not to misconstrue her action. A number of letters passed between them and it seemed to Miss Audenreid that in her correspondent she had found a man whose sentiments rendered him worthy to be loved by any woman. Indeed, she began to feel a regret—somewhat selfish, it is true—that he had been deprived of his leg, for she could not think of marrying a man who must hobble through life.

Finally the invalid wrote that he had been promised that he might go out at the end of the week and begged that his first exit might be a call upon the lady whose encouragement had been the cause of such a speedy recovery. Miss Audenreid replied that she took great pleasure in granting his request, and from that moment till the time of the appointed visit her heart fluttered ominously. She, however, fortified herself with an irrevocable resolution that she would not give way to anything which would lead to her having to refuse a man with but one leg.

It was arranged that the invalid should call about 8 o'clock in the evening. Miss Audenreid had a great easy chair placed for him before a cheerful open fire and threw an afghan over the back ready for use.

When the bell rang promptly at 8 o'clock and the visitor had been announced Miss Audenreid went to the drawing room. To her astonishment, the invalid advanced to meet her with a buoyancy of step that he had not possessed even before the accident.

"I am delighted," she said, "that you have supplied your defect so successfully."

"What defect?"

"Your lost leg."

"I haven't lost it. It was brought into the house. You see, I had a foot on which I couldn't walk and for appearance's sake used a cork support, strapping up my leg from the knee till I was in the carriage, when I always unstrapped it. My nerves were shattered by the accident, but my foot is now entirely well."

Miss Audenreid gave her heart and hand to a man with two legs.

THE SUNDIAL.

It Should Be Marked For the Latitude In Which It Stands.

In an old shop in lower New York a man keeps up his trade of dial making. The dials, square, octagonal or circular, are hand chased. They do not receive a high polish, and any accidental effect of weather stain or other "tone of time" is carefully preserved if not skillfully added. These dials, fitted with the gnomon, or stylus, are then artfully slipped into the show windows of uptown curiosity shops among a selected debris of Sheffield plate, prism candlesticks, inlaid tea caddies and old blue plates.

A visitor to one of these shops asked: "How old is that brass dial over there? It's all hand work, isn't it?"

"It's all hand work," said the proprietor, whom we will call Truthful James. "I can testify to that, for I know the man whose hands made it. It's about a month old, if you want to know. You're like lots of other people—you want an old Scotch or English dial. Don't you know it would be useless, if you found it, for practical purposes? Excuse me, but haven't you ever studied geography and heard of latitude? A dial ought to be marked out scientifically for the exact latitude in which it is to be set up. So unless you strike the same parallel in the states that the dial left in England it will tell lies from morning till night. You'd be surprised how many people pick up a dial that strikes their fancy which perhaps stood in the garden of an old Virginia estate, intending to hurry it off to the big grounds of some place in Minnesota; or they'll snatch at some quaint dial from New England, with the idea of rigging it up in Texas.

"More people would make the same blunder, except that many haven't caught on to dials. Too bad. Nothing is prettier than a simple dial at the crossways of garden paths, or by a fountain or on a terrace or at the entrance of a pergola or near a rustic seat or arbor. You don't have to hire a head gardener and two assistants to keep a sundial. Marble platforms and pedestals are very grand, but unless you're running a big Italian garden with clipped hedges and yews and statues something simple is what you want. The dial will keep just as good time, once it's engraved right, if it's mounted on a tree stump, with ivy planted round it, or on a bowlder, or on the coping of an old disused well, or on a column of cobbles mortared together, or on top of the old hitching post that the family doesn't use in these automobile days, but doesn't want to root up and throw away.

"You'd be surprised at the ingenuity of some people," said Truthful James, who himself seemed of ingenious bent. "I mean people who haven't much money to spend and are fond of their own old stuff for association's sake. They're the ones who get effects with a piece of junk, a lump of sentiment and a pocket of small change that can't be bought with a blank check. I've known people who used an old milestone to set the dial on, or who laid a slab over an old stone garden urn, or who saved the capitals from pillars on a house being torn down, or who even rigged up a standard from the bricks of a chimney on an old homestead that had meant a lot to them. One family made a sort of cairn out of a geology collection some ancestor had formed. Another took a flag pole for the gnomon and laid out a dial with pebbles in the grass around the pole.

"No, it doesn't require any skill to set up the dial. Get the noon mark for the gnomon on several days, nick it on the slab and then set the dial in a bed of cement. There you are."—New York Post.

Saluting the Flag.

Army regulations prescribe in detail what honors shall be paid to the flag, and these regulations are implicitly and gladly observed. No matter how little one may relish the duty of showing the respect due to some military superior, he is always ready and glad to do honor to his flag. Whenever any one in the military service of the United States passes near the unfurled colors or whenever the flag passes before him, he is required to remove his cap in salute, and if sitting he is required to rise and stand at "attention" until the flag has passed.—St. Nicholas.
